Not too bad a crossing. 1916 As we were nearing Arendal, in Norway, j DEGREESdfj we nearly ran into a mine. The sudden veering of the steamer threw us all off our seats. All along the south coast of Norway, where there are many currents, loose mines are constantly being washed up. Torneo: the frontier town of the Russian Friday, Empire. The Customs officials were insisting on Jan 21 opening my luggage, when I told them that I had passed out of France into England, out of England into Norway, out of Norway into Sweden, and out of Sweden without any examination. I protested that, as I was carrying a Foreign Office bag, English and French official papers, and letters from the Russian Embassy, * I would not allow anything to be touched now that I was in Russia. The head official replied, You are in Finland, not in Russia! On my declaring that I would sit on my luggage until orders arrived from the Minister for Foreign Affairs in Petrograd, they climbed down. A perfect Arctic day. In front of the station, on * This as a matter of courtesy and not in an official capacity The English Foreign Office and War Office gladly seized any opportunity of direct communication with Russia through reputable channels. 1916 a detached birch-tree covered with hoar-frost silhouetted against the faintest blue sky, were seventeen magpies settling to roost. A symphony in black and...
