It is safe to assert that the failure of the great majority of aerial negatives is due to a lack of appreciation of these difficulties and especially the tendency to over-exposure. Preventives are more efficacious than Remedies remedies. To avoid over-exposure, it is easy to remember that the greater the elevation the shorter must be the exposure. This is simply controlled by reducing the aperture or diaphragm of the lens employed and by the use of a really reliable exposure shutter. Vibration can be overcome by rigidity in the camera and its attachments, with extreme care in its manipulation at the moment of exposure. Atmospheric difficulties must be dealt with as they arise, but much can be done by not attempting to work under unfavorable conditions where there is choice of time. The best time to make aerial photographs is immediately after a protracted...
