Not illustrated. 1896 Excerpt: .Prior to 1884 premises in Paternoster Row, bearing the date 1671, served as the warehouse and publishing office. Overlooking Ave Maria Lane is a large show-room, in which the books bound in leather bindings are The Oxford Press, New York. displayed. Punch a few weeks ago described the University Press as the House Beautiful of Books. There is also a reading-room provided for the use of members of the Universities, schoolmasters and others interested in education, where all the publications of the University can be seen. It may be added that there is a similar reading-room at the Edinburgh depot at 12 Frederick Street. Some forty years have passed since the London representatives of the Oxford University Press first sent a traveller to the United States, with the result that, two years later, an agency was established in New York. The growth of the business was hindered by the Civil War, but after the restoration of peace it advanced by leaps and bounds. The demand for Clarendon Press books and Oxford devotional works, especially the Oxford Bible for Teachers, increased so steadily that the opening of a regular American branch was found to be absolutely necessary. The accompanying view shows the building in Fifth Avenue. New York, where the University has carried on a publishing business since 1896. Dr. Fowler, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford, in his Latin The speech at the beginning of the present Term, referred to the Oxford f tlp y University...
